RELEASE WORDS.

Do you have a release word, or two? What is it?

So many times when I ask this question a handler will say – its OK or yes! I then proceed to hold a casual conversation with them and show just how many times they use those words, and none of them relates to anything the dog does! Oops!!

So my advice is to have a release word that you would very seldom use in any other situation. I use Break. Some people use Free. But It can be anything that isn't a casual word.

Release words are very important as they communicate to the dog when they can stop doing the behaviour you've just asked them to do. It might be a sit, down, a wait or a contact behaviour etc.

It's a good idea to use this release words in general life so the dog understands the idea of keeping on doing what you've asked, and when they can stop doing it. Not just when they feel like it.

This sort of thing will strengthen your relationship, it makes things clearer for your dog (which they love) and will lead to more success in your chosen dog sport(s)
